Fairfax City's Economic Development Office Launches 'Faces of Fairfax City' Photo and Interview Series Highlighting the City's Business Community

Fairfax, VA – Fairfax City's Economic Development Office launches a photo and interview series: 'Faces of Fairfax City' to spotlight the city's business community. The series aims to provide an authentic look at the businesses that help create the city's unique character, charm, and sense of community.

"The Faces of Fairfax City series allows us to show appreciation to our business community for not only their vision but also for their passion and drive. Our city businesses help create a sense of place and are a source of our identity and pride," said David Meyer, City of Fairfax Mayor. "During this past year, they have shown their resiliency and that Fairfax City is a destination that is alive with opportunities and vibrant activity centers that are diverse, creative, and welcoming."

Christopher Bruno, Director of Economic Development, said, "Fairfax City is a destination for all in the center of Northern Virginia, and it is a place where people can come together to shop, work, learn, and play. This program pulls back the curtain on our city's business community to show why Fairfax City stands out, and why it's poised for years of success."

The Faces of Fairfax City series will begin on Friday, February 19 at noon with a new post each week on Twitter, Instagram, Facebook, and LinkedIn at @FairfaxCityEDA and co-published on the Fairfax City Economic Development Authority's website.
